

Scientists warn that the global average temperature has already increased by 1.2 degrees Celsius since pre-industrial times . Sea levels have risen by an average of 3.6 millimeters per year since 2006 . Cities like Miami, New York, and Jakarta are implementing billion-dollar infrastructure projects to combat rising tides . The United Nations is planning an emergency summit next month, where world leaders are expected to discuss urgent measures to mitigate the worsening climate crisis . The insurance industry is facing unprecedented losses due to natural disasters, with damages from hurricanes, wildfires, and floods costing hundreds of billions of dollars annually .